Description : an exhaust system was to safely route exhaust gases from the engine so they can be exhausted into the environment, The exhaust system is typically connected to the exhaust manifold, which collects exhaust gases from the engine cylinders' exhaust ports. In light-duty applications, catalytic converters and diesel particulate filters (DPF) can be placed either in the close-coupled position to the exhaust manifold or in the underfloor position. The choice of location is determined by the availability of space and the desired temperature profile, with the close-coupled location providing exposure to the highest possible exhaust gas temperatures.
